

Disability Human Services

Minot State University has a well-respected 30-year history of effectively preparing human service professionals to specifically support individuals with intellectual/developmental disabilities (IDD) in community settings.

To meet the national demand for successful administrators at human services agencies, we have developed an online Master of Science in Disability Human Services degree. This unique degree prepares you to use your new knowledge and skills to strategically lead and nurture other professionals in a human services agency. The degree blends coursework from a variety of fields including education, human services, management, and human resources.

Relevant areas include a firm grounding in strategic management, disability law and policy, human resources, and accounting. You will also receive high-quality instruction in the latest trends related to serving people with severe disabilities across the lifespan and will learn research skills to allow you to be an effective problem solver.

Be seen. Be heard. Be inspired.
